Coin Lore

Be a Sure Winner with this Flipper!

by Bill Groom

The below advertising token is classified as a flipper. Dating back into the 1930's, it's about the size of a half dollar. In addition to being collected as a token, it has appeal to those who collect items related to tobacco. These pocket-sized conversation pieces probably generated many a smile in their day. As such, word-of-mouth advertising was the result. Keep in mind that these tokens circulated long before folks knew anything about carcinogens; this, when smoking was simply a pleasurable pastime.

According to Wikipedia, Bull Durham smoking tobacco was originally rooted in Durham, North Carolina. One J.R. Green, a tobacco peddler, started the company back in the 1850's. During the Civil War, soldiers in both the Union and Confederate camps enjoyed Green's tobacco. Following the war, the company changed hands many times. Yet, thanks to a highly successful advertising campaign by W.T. Blackwell, it became one of the most successful tobacco brands of all time. Whereas the company produced 60,000 pounds of tobacco in 1869, by 1883, it produced over five million pounds. Into the twentieth century, Bull Durham was consolidated into the American Tobacco Company.

Advertising was what made Bull Durham famous. Their signs were painted on barns, their coupons could be redeemed for a gold plated watch, and other inventive marketing strategies helped make their brand so well known. It occurs to this writer if Bull Durham may have sired Elsie the Cow who mooed and wooed customers for Borden Dairy Products in the 1930's udderly possible, methinks!
