Coin Lore

Sharing the Joy by Bill Snyder

Some of the great joys of collecting is to be able to share your experiences and discoveries with a like-minded collector and to learn as much as possible about your specialty.

You may know a local collector with whom you can share your numismatic interest, be it Morgan Dollars, Ancient coins, or whatever.

If no such local friend is available, free coin forums on the Web are the way to go. Questions may be asked, new acquisitions displayed, coins bought and sold, and more.

I am a member of forums specializing in US Colonial, British, Australian, British India, and Russian coins. In this way, I have 'met' many collectors and discussed our common interests publically (on the forum), and privately (by individual emails).

Recently, I found that there is no need to join many different forums. You can get it all, like questions on State Quarters, grading of specific illustrated coins, new varieties (whether from the Denver Mint or the Austrian Mint), coins for sale, and more, in one place. It is the Coin Community Family, at <http://www.coincommunity.com>, where novices and experts in all fields meet.

Coin Community allows you to search the archives for information on a myriad of coin issues and subscribe to threads so that you can follow chosen topics. Also, members in good standing can post items for sale.

And, of course, you can your display your latest acquisitions for all to see.

I learned about the Coin Community Family from Bill Groom. Thanks, Bill.
